

VICTORIAN

CIRCA 1905

At the end of the block, a Victorian stands in contrast to the simpler homes. A truncated, hipped roof covers the structure. A gabled protrusion centered on the front elevation covers a large three-sided bay window. A corner porch sits to the left under a gently sloped canopy supported by a tapered column. A transom sits over the front door. A false gable sits on the left slope of the hipped roof. Both gables have fish scale shingles. The side gable has a small semi-circular louvered vent which the front gable has a larger more coarsely louvered rectangular vent. The windows display the tall narrow shape characteristic of the Victorian except for a row of four smaller and shorter windows at the rear, most likely the windows of a porch. The front door has a square glass set between decorative inset panels. The house is covered with narrow clapboards siding with corner fascias and has tight, boxed eaves.

This house may have been moved from 290 E. Kingsley Ave. The earliest recorded owner was John Lonnon (1905 city directory). Mr. Lonnon was a rancher.
