RE: Two Large Pine Trees in Front Yard

To whom it may concern,

Linda and multiple neighbors are concerned about their safety, if either of her two pines were to fall in a storm. After 46 years of working in the tree industry, numerous times I've seen large Pines fall over in wind storms after we get heavy rain. This is due to the unstable soil around the root system. Additionally, the needles do not shed in the winter. So Pines carry their weight load throughout the storm season.

These are my observations from years of experience.

Cordially,

Tom Day
